Titanium Moves To Store Shelves

Titanium, known principally for its applications in supersonic aircraft, space vehicles, and missiles, is finding a new and more down-to-earth application related to the neighborhood supermarket.

Titanium tubing, produced by Harvey Aluminum, is being fabricated into titanium bottle equipment for household bleach by Biner-Ellison Machine, Inc., Los Angeles.

"Household bleach is a five to six per cent solution of a chemical known as sodium hypochlorite which releases oxygen and chlorine," said Ed Hunt, general manager of Biner-Ellison.

"THIS IS A very corrosive solution. Even the finest stainless steels are attacked at a rapid rate. To overcome this, we use 100 per cent plastic and titanium construction and are supplying these machines to leading bleach manufacturers and supermarkets," he said.

"In addition to household bleach, we make machines that bottle swimming pool chemi-als. The same sodium hypochlorite is used for chlorination of swimming pools to disinfect them and control algae, only this is about 15 per cent, or about triple the strength of household bleach. Here again, we use titanium for its outstanding resistance to corrosion."

Kilsby Tubesupply, Los Angeles, a subsidiary of Republic Supply Corp. of California, and distributors of Harvey metal, supplies the titanium tubing for the Biner-Ellison bottling equipment.

"WE BELIEVE that titanium tubing has a very important future in all corrosion resisting applications," said Homer Harvey, executive vice president of Harvey Aluminum.

"In the chemical and petrochemical industries, in marine, food, anodizing and plating applications, anywhere that corrosive conditions lead to expensive maintenance and replacement of conventional metals, titanium can perform an outstanding service at a realistic cost."
